

Each month, CH&L editors bring you the events, art exhibitions, hot-off-the-press books and other exciting news we think you should know.

BOOK RELEASE: Shinin' Times at The Fort

THE FORT RESTAURANT in Morrison is a Colorado landmark. It has an allure all its own, with its adobe-and-timber structure and mid-19th-century vibe. Plenty of folks—from famous foodies to not-so-famous locals—know it's one of the best places to taste Western fare. (Roasted buffalo marrow bones, anyone?) To celebrate the restaurant's 50th anniversary, Holly Arnold Kinney, daughter of founder Sam Arnold, has written Shinin' Times at the Fort, a tribute cookbook that not only features some of the restaurant's signature recipes, but also shares the Fort's history—a small but fascinating piece of Colorado lore. Available in November from thefort.com.

A Wine Lover's Pilgrimage

WARM DAYS AND COOL NIGHTS ON THE WESTERN SLOPE—plus elevations that don't exceed 5,000 feet—make an ideal setting for growing grapes. To celebrate the harvest, head to Palisade September 16-19 for the Colorado Mountain Winefest. Enjoy winery tours, chef demonstrations, wine seminars, the ever-popular grape stomp and tastings from more than 55 Colorado wineries. The winefest raises funds for the Colorado Association for Viticulture and Enology, the trade organization of grape growers and winemakers. Coloradowinefest.com.

At the DAM: Art for Cowboys

OPEN THROUGH NOVEMBER 28, Charles Deas and 1840s America at the Denver Art Museum is the world's first retrospective of Western American painter Charles Deas, whose work helped shape America's view of the West during the country's most intense period of westward expansion. Not only will you get to see art that hasn't been displayed publicly for 150 years, you'll also learn Deas' fascinating life story. (Tip: General admission to the DAM is free on the first Saturday of each month.) Denverartmuseum.org
